Last Flight Home
DVD film by Jennifer Powers and Daniel T. O'Brien
Review by Amy Laboda

Last Flight Home isn't the kind of DVD you just slap in the player for pure entertainment. This DVD, in which WAI member Valerie Thal-Slocum participated, documents the moving story of Dr. Patrick Scannon's work searching for and finding missing World War II aircraft and the MIAs associated with them in Palau, a tiny island in the South Pacific, that was the site of a ferocious battle near the end of WWII. More than 200 US aircraft went down on and around the islands, and half of those crewing the aircraft have been designated "Whereabouts unknown, Missing In Action." The film follows the story of three searches in Palau and the families touched by Scannon's discoveries. Filming took nearly six years and spanned seven expeditions to Palau. Scannon and the film are supported by the Bent Star Project, Ltd., which was created to fund, research and staff Dr. Scannon's trips to the South Pacific in search of closure for the families of WWII aircrew listed as "Missing in Action."

Shrine Mountain Inn Offers Accessible Outdoor Adventure

by Kara Williams

Backcountry enthusiasts who want to explore Colorado's winter wilderness but prefer to forego a day-long trek into the mountains should consider a stay at the Shrine Mountain Inn. Its three log cabins are less than three miles by snowshoes or skis from the parking lot at the top of Vail Pass (Interstate 70). Book an entire, multi-bedroom cabin with friends or family, or share accommodations with other like-minded travelers. The charmingly rustic huts are equipped with electricity, running water, flush toilets and full kitchens. Wrap-around decks provide an ideal place to kick back and admire the stunning panoramic views from 11,209 feet. (970) 925-5775, www.shrinemountaininn.com. ↗
